

Creating a Lasting Legacy

Students have recently visited the First World War battlefields in France and Belgium as part of a national scheme to raise awareness of the impact it had on us a nation. Whilst in France Chelsey, Natalie and Jenny attended workshops to develop the core skills needed to carry out their own research at various sites around the area.

Upon returning to school the students used the information and skills they developed to create a presentation based on the life of soldiers on the front line and delivered it to both students within our school and students at a local primary school. As well as organising the presentations the students also contacted local newspapers resulting in three articles about their experiences being published.

Overall the experience was a positive one and the work of the students is still being used today. They really have created a lasting legacy.
